Last Sunday at the 10 a.m. Mass, I blessed our new solemn Marian vestment set, which was also displayed at the other Masses, before we begin using it. In place of my regular pastor letter this weekend, I asked Christopher, our director of music, to share more about this stunning vestment set, as he worked with the friars to design the set and coordinated its commissioning with the atelier, Sacra Domus Aurea in Rome.

A SOLEMN MARIAN VESTMENT SET

As you may recall, one of the items that our 2024 Giving Tuesday campaign funded was a new, solemn Marian vestment set. I am excited to share that we have received the vestments—a project that took many months to design and complete—and the friars and I are deeply satisfied by the results.

The set was commissioned for Marian feasts, especially for the annual profession of our Dominican novice brothers. Every element weaves together Marian theology and the patrimony of the Dominican Order. The vestments are white and blue, colors long associated with Marian devotion: white for festal joy and purity, blue for heavenly grace and maternal care. The principal fabric is a custom Venetian silk damask, woven specifically for this commission, with the Dominican cross and the eight-pointed star of St. Dominic integrated directly into the cloth.

The blue banding carries a restrained symbolic language. Lilies of the valley and crowns refer to Mary's humility and queenship. Quatrefoils, drawn from the Gothic tradition, evoke the ordered harmony of creation—the four corners of the earth and the fullness of the world gathered toward God. In Marian theology, they recall Mary's unique role as the one through whom the Creator enters creation, and through whom creation is offered back to him.

On the shield of the cope (a liturgical cape for non-Eucharistic liturgies), six-pointed stars appear alongside other Marian symbols like the white rose and fleur-de-lis. In the Church's medieval visual vocabulary, such stars signify divine order and heavenly light.

There are 24 of these stars, which recalls the fullness of the people of God, traditionally understood as the 12 tribes of Israel and the 12 apostles together, situating Marian devotion within the whole arc of salvation history. The cope shield also includes white roses and fleur-de-lis, rendered in a restrained Gothic idiom inspired by the work of the Gothic revival ecclesiastical architect and designer Augustus Pugin. The shield's white background is watered silk, the same type traditionally used for the papal fascia. On the back of the cope, the chasuble, and the humeral veil, there is a single Marian monogram, the letter "M," referencing the ancient Auspice Maria tradition by which the Church places worship "under the protection" of the Blessed Virgin.

The cope and the dalmatic (deacon's vestment) include tassels, a detail with biblical and liturgical resonance. In the Book of Numbers, Israel is commanded to wear tassels "that you may look upon them and remember all the commandments of the Lord, to do them" (Numbers 15:37–41). In Christian vesture, this is received typologically as a visible remembrance of God's law, while the movement of the tassels also underscores the dynamic, service-oriented character of the diaconal ministry.

Vestments, like sacred music and architecture, belong to the Church's way of teaching through form. This beautiful set was commissioned not for novelty, but for longevity, and is intended to serve St. Gertrude Parish for many generations to come, placing our common prayer, quite literally, auspice Maria—under the protection of Mary.
